Archetypes of Challenges	Self-criticism, family matters, perfectionism
Lessons and challenges	'revolve around the phrase: 'you should have done this for me', or 'someone ought to fix that', or 'I did this for you, so you should do that for me because that's fair and balanced.'
What areas of life will require some effort to master	learning that sometimes he has to be 'dragged onto the podium' in order to become a great class president, resisting leadership roles at first. 'All or nothing' attitudes can create a rocky ride. Will feel emotionally unsupported when he gets too spread out, affecting his nervous system. Fueling up with a too much caffeine could result in burnouts.
To help him	'help him feel very secure about himself. There is probably some childhood wound that is still hurting that manifests in the negative behavior. Try doing (and completing) something creative and fun, where he can feel playful while remaining emotionally safe.
Key to resolving challenges	needs to balance emotional swings.
When feeling out of balance	he should review personal boundaries, and develop an ability to say 'no' and avoid spreading too thin. Spend quality time with friends, hang out and socialize.
